Synopsis

Crisis response, climate change, cyber security risk and credit losses have forced businesses to re-evaluate their operating models. AGMs and board meetings have gone virtual, and dividend policies were cast aside amidst looming uncertainties. Stakeholders' expectations for more sustainable business practices and growing shareholder activism for deeper transparency have increased the pressure on boards. As the economy recovers, expectations of boards and corporate governance practices must evolve to respond to the new normal.

This session will explore emerging considerations for effective corporate governance, covering the use of digital and technological capabilities for improved oversight and communication. We will examine how boards can address the growing need for effective governance in today's context.

Course Objectives

- Explore the influence of digital enablers on corporate governance practices.
- Address new and resurfaced topics that have become more prevalent in the new normal.
- Define expectations of corporate governance in addressing these hot topics.

About the Speakers

David Chew
